Fluorescent-tube ultraviolet lights (black lights) are an inexpensive and easy way to verify the authenticity of Credit Cards, Checks, Driver Licenses and Currency. All four major credit cards glow under black light. Visa's Dove logo (similar to the hologram) glows in the center of its cards. MasterCard shows an M and a C at the bottom of the card. On Novus/Discover cards, the word "NOVUS" appears at an angle across the card. The letters "AMEX" appear in large type across the front of American Express cards. A quick check under a black light before swiping the card through the credit card terminal will reveal if ultraviolet-sensitive symbols or words are embedded in the plastic.

Authorities encourage merchants to install a black light in the checkout area, out of the customer's view, to test credit cards. Many government offices and private businesses rely upon the presentation of a Driver Licenses or identity card to verify a person's identity. However, fraud is often perpetrated against both government and businesses by the use of fraudulent identification. In 35 states a new security feature has been added on Drivers Licenses including, among other things, ultraviolet ink, an invisible anti-counterfeiting feature that becomes visible when an ultraviolet light is used to illuminate the card. Millions of Counterfeit Dollars circulate daily. In as little as 3 years, the percentage rate of counterfeit money produced in computers by scam artists has gone from almost nothing to a shocking 43%. To counter this, the United States has embedded within the US currency paper a security thread that glows under ultraviolet light. Protect yourself and your business DETECT COUNTERFEIT Money, Checks, Driver Licenses and Credit Cards before you accept them!
